INTRODUCTION

Being a guy, I like to switch channels as I watch TV. Incessantly. It's a guy thing, I know, and I'm okay with that. I own it. But when you switch channels, or even when you watch a TV program all the way through, you often catch certain guest stars who look familiar.

This book is designed to provide answers to questions like, "Hey, isn't that Richard Dreyfuss on that 'Bewitched' episode?" (Yes.) Or, "Say, that looks like Robert Redford on that 'Twilight Zone.' Is it?" (Sure is.) Or, "Boy, I wonder if that's Clark Gable on that episode of 'The Muppet Show'?" (No, it isn't, and if you think it is you need the kind of help that this book can't provide.)

In other words, The TV Encyclopedia tells you more than the easy stuff—that Dick Van Dyke starred in "The Dick Van Dyke Show," for instance. Any TV book worth its salt could tell you that. But how many will tell you that he did two guest shots on "The Phil Silvers Show" in the fifties, or that Van Dyke and Mary Tyler Moore revived the characters of Rob and Laura Petrie on Moore's 1979 variety series? Just one, we hope. Because TV is much more than who starred in what series, although that information is certainly important. TV is also guest appearances on sitcoms and variety shows and specials. It's director John Frankenheimer chasing some kids off a "Playhouse 90" set in 1959 and getting bawled out on the air by Art Linkletter, whose "House Party" show the kids were appearing on. It's Bob Barker deciding to quit coloring his hair. It's Marlo Thomas appearing on "Bonanza" as a Chinese mail-order bride destined for Hoss Cartwright (Dan Blocker). It's the writers who put the words in the actors' mouths, and the directors who kept them from running into the camera.

Yes, the good, the bad and the weird. That's TV. And that's what this book proposes to examine. Inside you'll find extensive information concerning thousands of performers, directors and writers and their work. There are also several trivia quizzes designed to test your own TV knowledge, and a few highly opinionated essays about selected TV shows that have either been highly influential or extremely popular or both. And now, if you'll excuse me, there's a good episode of "The Dick Van Dyke Show" coming on....

ABOUT THE SYMBOLS

The symbols CBS, ABC, FOX, etc. after most entries are self-explanatory. However, a few symbols may be less familiar. A syndicated (non-network) program is indicated by the symbol SYN, and the symbol DUM stands for the DuMont television network, which was in existence from 1946-55. Also, PBS was known as NET during the 1960's.

ACKNOWLEDGMENTS

The story of this book—and of my life—begins with family. My parents, David and Marilyn Inman, offered endless encouragement, support and love to me as I pursued my goal of being a writer. My brother and sister, Steve and Amy Inman, were always there as well. Without them, this book would not exist. Neither would I.

Jena Monahan hired me almost ten years ago to write the television trivia column that would lead to this book. Greg Johnson offered help and encouragement in his position as features editor of The Courier-Journal in Louisville, Kentucky, where I work as a reporter and critic. My sister-in-law, Mindy Inman, helped me with soap opera information.

My agent, Kris Dahl of ICM, was a tireless represenative on my behalf, as was her assistant Gordon Kato. Technical help came willingly from computer experts and friends Jim Reed and Kevin Barnes. Kevin spent many a night babysitting my computer system when I was convinced the machine would work for anyone except me. He often brought his delightful son Jody, who thought the best thing about my writing a TV book was the collection of pictures from "ALF" that I amassed. Boz Johnson and Kelly O'Loane did the typesetting and page layouts with professionalism and style. Judy Linden has been a helpful and supportive editor, and the assistance of her assistant, Sharon Stahl, has also been appreciated.

I was fortunate to have conscientious and thorough researchers working for me: Sherri Arnett, Jeff Ashley, Holly Hinson and Kory Wilcoxson.

Program information was provided by the following: George Faber and Betsy Vorce of Viacom, Andy Samet and James Wood of Worldvision Enterprises, Mandy Murphy of Paramount, Renee Clinkunbroomer of MCA Television, Sharon Jacobson of The Nostalgia Channel, Anna Umbach of King World, Celeste Hicks of the USA Network, Julianne Causey of The Family Channel and Jeff Straw of WLKY–TV in Louisville. Additional information was provided by helpful folks at TNT and Louisville TV stations WHAS, WAVE and WDRB.

Finally, my thanks go to Vince Staten, formerly the TV critic with The Louisville Times. Vince and I conceived this idea about five years ago. By the time the project became a reality, Vince was working on several books of his own and couldn't share authorship with me. But his help, advice, support and friendship are—and always have been—very special to me.

THE ADVENTURES OF OZZIE AND HARRIET, ABC, 1952-66.

"Uh-uh, Dave, uh-uh Rick, uh-uh Harriet...."

So went the call of Ozzie every week on "The Adventures of Ozzie and Harriet," as America watched little Ricky Nelson grow into a rock and roll idol, little Dave grow into Rick's slightly boring older brother and Ozzie stay pretty much the same benign, bumbling pop he'd been the week, or year, or even decade before.

In reality, of course, Ozzie Nelson was one sharp businessman and the producer-director and occasional writer for "The Adventures of Ozzie and Harriet," which had begun on radio in 1944. In 1949, Ozzie brought on his own young sons to play his sons, and on television it was always a family affair, even as Rick and Dave grew older and married—their real-life wives played their wives on the show.

The plots on "Ozzie and Harriet" were 1950's sitcom stuff all the way, but the show had its own kind of special wit. And the scrapes everyone got into at least had some sort of basis in reality. At its worst, the show was just kind of, well, relaxing and familiar.

When Ricky wasn't banging on his guitar or drums, that is. In late 1956, Ricky performed "I'm Walkin'" on the "Ricky, the Drummer" episode and a rock and roll legend was born. For virtually all the rest of the show's run, Ricky sang a song a week, usually in a short sequence tacked on to the end of the show.

"The Adventures of Ozzie and Harriet" was never a hit; it was never even in the top 25 shows. But it was a dependable performer at a time when ABC was hungry for hits. By the time it went off the air in 1966, Dave and Rick were married and practicing lawyers. In later years, both men would divorce and Rick would die in a 1985 plane crash in which drugs may have been involved.

ALL IN THE FAMILY, CBS, 1971-79.

Archie Bunker made television history. He called a spade a spade, so to speak, and had a racial epithet for every minority. Producers Norman Lear and Bud Yorkin intended for Archie to be a character we laughed at, but many of the viewers who made the Bunker's America's favorite family for almost all the 1970s were laughing with Archie, not at him. Carroll O'Connor played Archie to a turn; his supporting cast—Jean Stapleton as wife Edith, Rob Reiner as son-in-law Mike "Meathead" Stivic, Sally Struthers as daughter Gloria—were his equals. By 1979, Stapleton, Reiner and Struthers had left the show, but O'Connor didn't know when to quit. "Archie Bunker's Place" ran into the mid-1980s, and became just another TV show—not a very good one at that. Strangely enough, however, the issues "All in the Family" addressed are just as prevalent today; ironically, the show now seems shrill and dated.

THE ANDY GRIFFITH SHOW

CBS, 1960-68.

How does a sitcom end an eight-season run as the nation's top show? Easy. Just make the humor gentle, the characters true-to-life and offer a rural haven from a fractured America, vintage 1968.

The quality of "The Andy Griffith Show" is as undisputed now as it was virtually unrecognized throughout much of the 1960s, and it was, overall, the doing of one man—Andy Griffith. By the late 1950s Griffith was a hit with his comedy albums and on Broadway, so could pick the best for his television vehicle—producer Sheldon Leonard (working with Danny Thomas) and writers such as Aaron Ruben, Arthur Stander and Bob Ross. Griffith didn't want a show that made fun of country people, and he didn't get one. He wanted a TV equivalent to the gentle radio comedy "Lum and Abner," and that's what he got. Griffith played Andy Taylor, a widower and sheriff of Mayberry, North Carolina; Ronny Howard was son Opie, Francis Bavier Andy's Aunt Bee, and Don Knotts was Andy's faithful deputy, one-bullet (kept in his pocket) Barney Fife. Barney left town, Andy romanced the local schoolteacher (Aneta Corseaut) and after a while we even got to see how Mayberry looked in color. The nation was changing, as well, but Mayberry remained an island of sanity and decency. And it still is.

TRIVIA QUIZ #2: "THE ANDY GRIFFITH SHOW"

Here are ten quotations from "The Andy Griffith Show." Who said them?

1. "Us Fifes is wiry."
2. "Nobody leaves a wash basin the way you do, Barney."
3. "You beat everything, you know that?"
4. "How do you do, Mrs. Wiley?"
5. "Johnny Paul Jason says burnt food gives you a good singing voice."
6. "Judy, Judy, Judy. All right you guys, come on you guys, let's go you guys."
7. "Best of luck to you and yours."
8. "Nip it in the bud!"
9. "[I'm] sick as a dog, but having the time of my life."
10. "I got a uvula, you got a uvula, all God's children got a uvula!"

BATMAN, ABC, 1966-68.

ABC brought the concept of "camp" to television with this 1966 comedy series that wasn't a comedy at all to the millions of kids who watched it and made it the hottest thing since white "Hullabaloo" boots. But to adults, "Batman" was a stiffly acted, deadpan spoof of movie serials that still stands up as so-bad-it's-good TV. Example: In the show's first episode, villainess Jill St. John dies by falling into an atomic pit in the Batcave. Batman, who tried to save her: "What a way to go-go."

An immediate hit, "Batman" spawned bat-paraphenalia, a theatrical bat-movie and even a new Arthur Murray dance, the "Batusi." Adam West, who played Batman, alias Bruce Wayne, and Burt Ward, who played Robin, alias Dick Grayson, became superstars for about a year. Big names lined up to play villians: Vincent Price as Egghead, George Sanders, Otto Preminger and Eli Wallach as Mr. Freeze, Burgess Meredith as the Penguin, Julie Newmar and Eartha Kitt as Catwoman (played in the movie by Lee Meriwether), David Wayne as the Mad Hatter, Roddy MacDowall as the Bookworm, Joan Collins as the Siren, Van Johnson as the Minstrel, Cesar Romero as the Joker and most notably, Frank Gorshin as the Riddler. Other stars appeared in cameos, usually popping out of windows in walls the Dynamic Duo were scaling. "Batman" aired twice a week at first, each Wednesday episode ending with a cliffhanger that was resolved on Thursday nights. By the fall of 1967, however, Batmania was cooling and the show went to once-a-week, adding Batgirl (Yvonne Craig) to keep those young male fans who were starting to get interested in the opposite sex. "Batman" didn't fade from public consciousness, however; when Tim Burton made a darker version of the story in 1989, it became the year's highest-grossing film. And a lot of people wanted it to be as witty and silly as the TV show was.

TRIVIA QUIZ #3: "BATMAN"

1. What was all over the Riddler's outfit?
2. What was the name of Bruce Wayne's aunt?
3. What was Batgirl's secret identity?
4. True or false: On the TV show, Bruce Wayne's butler, Alfred, knew the secret identity of his boss.
5. Who created Batman?
6. Neil Hamilton played police commissioner ___.
7. Stafford Repp played police chief ___.
8. The "Batman" theme song had a one-word lyric. What was it?
9. Fill in the blank: "Tune in tomorrow night: Same ____, same _______."
10. True or false: Sean Connery once popped out of a window on the show.

(Answers at end of book.)

THE BEVERLY HILLBILLIES

CBS, 1962-71.

This hugely successful sitcom set audience records that stood for years. It was about an Ozark family who struck oil and moved to the hills of Beverly: Buddy Ebsen was Jed Clampett, Donna Douglas his daughter Elly May, Max Baer Jr. his nephew Jethro and Irene Ryan the grandma of the batch. Paul Henning, the show's creator, was a Missouri native and had fiddled with cornpone humor while writing for Bob Cummings and for George Burns and Gracie Allen. In its Wednesday night time spot, the show was the first to give Perry Como fits (he was competing on NBC) and its success probably helped keep "The Dick Van Dyke Show," which followed it, on the air. In 1970 the show fell out of TV's top 25 shows for the first time and when CBS cleaned house of its rural-oriented shows in 1971, "The Beverly Hillbillies"—which had begun poking fun at women's liberation—bit the dust.

BONANZA, NBC, 1959-73.

The Ponderosa, a zillion-acre ranch (it was supposed to be a thousand square miles) in Nevada, was a man's world. Here was where rancher Ben Cartwright lived with his sons—serious Adam (Pernell Roberts), gentle Hoss (Dan Blocker) and romantic Little Joe (Michael Landon).

There weren't many woman around, and with good reason. They all kept dying. Each of Ben's sons had a different mother: Adam's was Elizabeth, played by Geraldine Brooks in the 1961 episode "Elizabeth, My Love"; Hoss' was Inger, played by Inga Swenson in the 1962 episode "Inger, My Love"; Joe's was Marie, played by Felicia Farr in the 1963 episode "Marie, My Love." And no sooner did each of them give birth than they were plowed down by a runaway stagecoach or something.

Not that it mattered to viewers: From 1961 to 1967, "Bonanza" was among the nation's top five shows. The relationships between the Cartwrights were what made "Bonanza" special—that and every fall, you could see what the new Chevrolets looked like.

In 1972, "Bonanza" was moved from its Sunday night timeslot to Tuesdays, opposite the new sitcom "Maude" on CBS. The new competition, and the loss of Dan Blocker in 1972, drove "Bonanza" off the air the next year.

In 1988, the TV-movie "Bonanza: The Next Generation" premiered, with none of the original cast. The characters included Ben Cartwright's brother (John Ireland), Little Joe's son (Michael Landon, Jr.), Joe's wife (Marianne Rogers, apparently avoiding stagecoaches) and Hoss' son (Brian A. Smith).

THE BRADY BUNCH

ABC, 1969-74, 1977; NBC, 1981; CBS, 1990.

This suburban family that won't go away was created by Sherwood Schwartz, a former writer for Red Skelton who also was responsible for "Gilligan's Island" (Did this guy have his finger on America's pulse or what?). Mike Brady (Robert Reed) married Carol something-or-other. He had three boys, all brunettes like dad; she had three girls, all blondes like mom. They lived together in a big house with the maid, Alice (Ann B. Davis). ABC brought them back for a variety show in 1977, and then NBC brought them back and had two of the daughters get married. Then CBS brought them back for a smash reunion movie and gave them another series chance. For about two weeks.

AS WRITER: "The Red Skelton Show," CBS, 1953-54.

* Carson's first appearance as a host in a late night slot came four years before he took over "The Tonight Show"; in 1958, he was a guest and host for Jack Paar.

* Carson tried his hand at sitcoms before going to talk shows—the 1960 pilot "Johnny Come Lately" cast him as Johnny Martin, go-getting TV reporter, but no network bought it. Carson was also considered for another sitcom role—that of Rob Petrie on what would become "The Dick Van Dyke Show."

* Carson's "roast" in 1968 spurred dozens of imitations; Dean Martin liked the idea so much that he began weekly roasts in the mid-seventies, providing employment for dozens of has-been comics.

* Emmies: 1976, 1977, 1978, 1979.

TV MOVIES AND MINISERIES: "The Sun Also Rises," NBC, 1984; "Master of the Game," CBS, 1984.

CHARLIE'S ANGELS, ABC, 1976-81.

"Charlie's Angels"—three sexy woman detectives—always seemed to get cases where they'd have to pose as prostitutes, or cheerleaders, or ice skaters, or aerobics instructors, or hula girls, or stewardesses, or bikini models. They were sent on these cases by the unseen Charlie Townsend

(John Forsythe), who would call them every week (how personal).

Created by Aaron Spelling, a TV magnate who has quit feeling ashamed of himself a long time ago, "Charlie's Angels" was agressively mindless TV fodder. Every so often there'd be a spicy scene, like the time the Angels went undercover in a women's prison and had to have their bodies fumigated while the fumigator, a gay warden, drooled over their forms.

Sabrina Duncan (Kate Jackson) was the "smart" one, which meant she could read without moving her lips. Jill (Farrah Fawcett) was the athletic, spunky one; when she left after one season after becoming a low-grade sex goddess, her just-as-athletic, equally-spunky sister Kris (Cheryl Ladd) took over. Kelly Garrett (Jaclyn Smith) was the one who'd "been around," whatever that meant. Jackson left the show in 1979 and was replaced by Tiffany Welles (Shelley Hack). Hack has the distinction of being the only Angel to be dumped by the producers, rather than vice-versa; she was replaced by Tanya Roberts, as Julie Rogers. But by then it was 1980, and people had been watching this junk for four years; by 1981 it was gone.

TRIVIA QUIZ #7: "CHARLIE'S ANGELS"

2. What movie did Farrah Fawcett make when she left the show?
3. Who's Farrah Fawcett's ex-husband?
4. True or false: All the Angels slept with Bosley.
5. The show's creator, Aaron Spelling, decided to try an all-male version of "Charlie's Angels," which ran as an episode called "Toni's Boys." Which well-known screen actress played Toni?
6. Kate Jackson had played nurse Kate Danko in a series before "Charlie's Angels." Name it.
7. Jaclyn Smith appeared in another ABC detective show in the 1989-90 season. Name it.
8. Farrah Fawcett's reputation as a serious actress grew when she appeared in this 1984 TV-movie about a battered wife. Name it.
9. Each episode of "Charlie's Angels" began with which phrase?
10. What perfume did Shelley Hack sell on TV before joining the show?

THE DICK VAN DYKE SHOW,

CBS, 1961-66.

This landmark sitcom was one of the first to examine a character's home and work life. It's just as notable for what it didn't have: No nagging wife, no imbecilic husband, no mother-in-law, no overly cute kids (if anything, Richie Petrie got a little uglier as he got older).

The people on "The Dick Van Dyke Show" acted like real people—witty, but real. Rob and Laura Petrie embodied the spirit of the early sixties in that they were young, attractive and successful. And they did what all young, attractive successful people did in those days: They moved to suburbia.

"The Dick Van Dyke Show" did have slapstick, make no mistake. But unlike almost any other sitcom, it combined pratfalls with sharp funny dialogue. And the gifted Dick Van Dyke delivered them both with ease. As his wife, Mary Tyler Moore learned comic skills that put her above just about any other actress working in a sixties sitcom—or a seventies sitcom, for that matter.

"The Dick Van Dyke Show" went out on top—Van Dyke and Moore wanted to try movies, but supporting players Rose Marie (Sally Rogers) and Morey Amsterdam (Buddy Sorrell) would've been happy if the show had run another five years. In the long run, the show's short run was best. It makes the memory of it all the more vivid: The first sitcom to deal with the subconscious in episodes about dreams and nightmares, the first to use flashbacks to explore Rob Petrie's Army stint and his days as a rookie comedy writer, the first to have as its hero and heroine a couple who looked and acted as though they'd actually made love before. If we're lucky, there won't be a reunion show.

THE ED SULLIVAN SHOW,

CBS, 1948-71.

A Sunday-night tradition for an amazing 23 years, "The Ed Sullivan Show" was hosted by a man with no real talent or camera presence who seemed to want to make up for that by introducing some of the most talented people in show business every week. Ed would have something for everyone: Jewish storyteller Myron Cohen for grandma, Robert Goulet for mom, Abbe Lane for dad, the singing Herman's Hermits for sis, the guy who spun plates to the "Saber Dance" for the older kids and the puppet mouse Topo Gigio ("Kees me goodnight, Eddie") for the little kids.

Sullivan also presented his share of cultural programming; in the mid-1950s, the show regularly featured scenes from Broadway shows, and the Bolshoi Ballet also appeared, as did performing bears from Russia. And Ed has his own favorite guests, people who almost never appeared on any other shows—dancer Peg Leg Bates, comics Johnny Wayne and Frank Shuster, ventriloquist Ricky Layne and his dummy Velvel. And the guy who spun the plates.

A few notable shows:

* The Beatles appeared on February 9, 1964, along with 30 policemen to control the screaming crowds. In New York, the show drew 59 percent of the viewing audience.

* Elvis Presley was on the show September 9, 1956; he was photographed from the waist up so his pelvic thrusts and leg wobbles wouldn't incite a sexual frenzy among American teenagers. Incidentally, Sullivan didn't emcee that show because he didn't like the idea of booking Presley; Charles Laughton did, announcing simply: "Ladies and gentlemen, Elvis Presley."

* Irving Berlin made a rare TV appearance with Sullivan to celebrate his 80th birthday in 1968. The show was expanded to 90 minutes and ended with an American flag in fireworks as everyone—except Ed, perhaps—sang "God Bless America."

* On January 5, 1964, Sullivan presented Sister Sourire, a Belgian nun whose recording of the song "Dominque" was a big hit. Sullivan traveled to Sourire's convent to hear her sing, and the incident was later dramatized—with Sullivan as himself—in the Debbie Reynolds film "The Singing Nun." On that same show, in the classic Sullivan tradition of offering something for everyone, our host also brought us the Nazareth Boys Choir from Israel, and Stevie Wonder.

GILLIGAN'S ISLAND, CBS, 1964-67. "Gilligan's Island" deserves some sort of commendation—not for quality but because the show's creators were able to put seven people on a desert island for three seasons and totally ignore what seven people on a desert island for three years would really do. Suffice to say they wouldn't spend all their time trying to make radios out of coconuts.

Created by former Red Skelton writer Sherwood Schwartz, "G.I." featured Gilligan (Bob Denver), erstwhile first mate of the S.S. Minnow, which had run aground. Alan Hale was the skipper, Jonas Grumby; he and Gilligan did a lot of Laurel and Hardy-style pratfalls and they shared a hut. Hmmm ....

> Jim Backus and Natalie Schafer were Mr. and Mrs. Thurston Howell III, Russell Johnson was the professor, Roy Hinckley by name, Tina Louise was movie star Ginger Grant and Dawn Wells was homespun Mary Ann Summers. When last heard from, in a 1981 TV-movie, the castaways had been rescued but were back on the island with the Harlem Globetrotters. Wonder if they were bunking with the Skipper and Gilligan ....

GLEASON, JACKIE

b. Brooklyn, NY, February 26, 1916; d. 1987. Comic legend with a ferocious appetite for life who gave us Reginald Van Gleason III, the Poor Soul, Joe the Bartender and Ralph Kramden.

AS A REGULAR: "The Life of Riley," NBC, 1949-50; "Cavalcade of Stars," DUM, 1950-52; "The Jackie Gleason Show," CBS, 1952-55; 1956-57; 1958-59; 1961; 1966-70; "The Honeymooners," CBS, 1955-56, 1971; "You're in the Picture," CBS, 1961; "Jackie Gleason and His American Scene Magazine," CBS, 1962-66.

AND: "Studio One: The Laugh Maker," CBS, 1953; "Studio One: Peacock City," CBS, 1954; "Best of Broadway: The Show-Off," CBS, 1955; "Studio One: Uncle Ed and Circumstance," CBS, 1955; "Playhouse 90: The Time of Your Life," CBS, 1958; "This Is Your Life," NBC, 1958; "The Arthur Godfrey Show," CBS, 1958; "All-Star Jazz: The Golden Age of Jazz," CBS, 1959; "The Fabulous Fifties," CBS, 1960; "The Kate Smith Show," CBS, 1960; "Arthur Godfrey Special," CBS, 1960; "The Secret World of Eddie Hodges," CBS, 1960; "Jackie Gleason Special: The Big Sell," CBS, 1960; "The Red Skelton Show," CBS, 1961; "Sunday Sports Spectacular: Jackie Gleason with Putter and Cue," CBS, 1961; "Jackie Gleason Special: The Million Dollar Incident," CBS, 1961; "Here's Lucy: Lucy Visits Jack Benny," CBS, 1968; "Jackie Gleason Special," CBS, 1973; "Two for Three," CBS, 1975; "The Honeymooners-The Second Honeymoon," ABC, 1976.

TV MOVIES AND MINISERIES: "Izzy and Moe," CBS, 1985.

* "You're in the Picture" aired exactly once, on January 20, 1961. The game show—in which celebrities stood behind life-sized pictures, poked their heads through holes and tried to guess what was on the picture surrounding them—was so lousy that the next week, at the appointed time, Gleason emerged on camera and apologized to the audience for insulting their intelligence. He filled the next several weeks with an informal talk show.

* "The Million Dollar Incident" was from a Gleason story idea; the Great One played himself, who'd been kidnapped (by a criminal mastermind played by Everett Sloane) for a million dollar ransom.

GREEN ACRES, CBS, 1965-71.
"Green Acres" was satirical where "The Beverly Hillbillies" was down-home, cynical where "Petticoat Junction" was sentimental. It was in a Twilight Zone all its own—Hooterville, Ill., which might have been an uncharted island somewhere for all its residents knew about modern society. "Petticoat Junction" was also set in Hooterville, but "Green Acres" was clearly on the weird side of town. Whenever characters from "Petticoat" visited "Green Acres," they always looked a little skittish, like they thought toxic waste might be buried in the area.

The main characters in "Green Acres" were Oliver and Lisa Douglas, portrayed by Eddie Albert and Eva Gabor. Oliver had been a successful Manhattan attorney; he and Lisa lived in a penthouse.

The closest Lisa wanted to get to terra firma was buying beauty mud at Bloomingdale's, but Oliver wanted a farm. He wanted to get back to the land, to get his hands dirty, to rekindle the American dream as it had been lived by our forefathers when the country was young and hopes were high. He would talk like that a lot, and every time he did, some patriotic music would start playing and somebody on the show would say, "There goes that patriotic music again."

Anyway, Oliver bought a farm in Hooterville (or "Hootersville," as Lisa called it) that turned out to be a dump. Lisa hated it, but she got along with the residents of Hootersville, most of whom were either selfish, small-minded farmers, genetic misfits or just plain geeks. Like Alf Monroe (Sid Melton) and his sister, Ralph (Mary Grace Canfield). Hank Kimball (Alvy Moore), the bumbling county agricultural agent. Arnold Ziffel, a pig who went to Harvard, watched "The Dick Van Dyke Show" and who, dear reader, wore hats. And Eb Dawson (Tom Lester), the hired hand who called Oliver and Lisa "mom" and "dad," not necessarily in that order.

The best indication of how good and weird "Green Acres" could be has to be in the episode called "A Square Is Not Round," in which Oliver's chickens keep laying square eggs. Everyone is baffled by this seeming impossibility, especially Hank Kimball, who was always baffled anyway. In one scene, Kimball, watches a square egg clunk down the chute. He picks up, storms into the henhouse and angrily asks, "All right, which one of you mothers laid this?"

HILL STREET BLUES, NBC, 1981-87. This ensemble drama has been as influential in its way as "The Mary Tyler Moore Show" was to sitcoms. Set in a crime-infested neighborhood of a major city, "Hill Street Blues" took an uncompromising look how bad things could get in Ronald Reagan's America and the effect it had on the people we paid to keep the peace. Through it all, like the surgeons surrounded by dying boys on "M*A*S*H," the Hill Street cops fought to keep their sanity through drink, sex, macho bonding and rough talk—the show's producers created a whole new kind of slang for the cops that sounded dirty, but really wasn't. Words like "hairball" and "scumbag" entered the vernacular.

Captain Frank Furillo (Daniel J. Travanti), a recovering alcoholic and uncompromising straight arrow, was saved by his love for public defender Joyce Davenport (Veronica Hamel), and vice versa.

At the calm eye of the storm, Furillo dealt with crooked cops, an endless parade of human misery and the political grandstanding of Chief Fletcher Daniels (Jon Cypher). He was forced to negotiate with street gangleaders, flattering them and withstanding their verbal abuse to prevent warfare. Still, cops were killed, victims were emotionally scarred, lives were wasted, plate glass was broken—someone always seemed to be flying through a window—and killers were set free on technicalities. In the show's final episode, somebody torched the Hill Street precinct station. The cops would be dispersed, some to neighborhoods even worse. Nothing was resolved, nothing ended. The plate glass would keep breaking somewhere else.

I

I LOVE LUCY, CBS, 1951-57.
CBS wanted Lucille Ball, already a success on the radio with "My Favorite Husband," to come to television in the early 1950s. But they didn't want her husband, Desi Arnaz. Who'd believe that Ball's character would be married to a Cuban bandleader? But Ball wanted Arnaz; he'd been touring with his band and she figured a TV show would keep him at home with steady employment, and they could start a family. So they put together a stage act and shot a pilot with their own money. CBS bought the idea, and Arnaz decided to try something new: A series filmed with three cameras, before a live audience. They did just that, with the help of veteran MGM photographer Karl Freund. That meant the show could be shot in California—unlike most TV at that time. The quality of the image was excellent, and the shows could be rerun forever. Which they have been.

"I Love Lucy" was an instant hit. Ball was a beauty who could take a fall or do a double-take as well as any woman on television; she was ably supported by William Frawley and Vivian Vance as neighbors Fred and Ethel Mertz. When Ball became pregnant in real life in 1952, it was written into the show, though the word "pregnant" couldn't be used. When Lucy Ricardo gave birth to little Ricky in January 1953, more people saw it than saw Dwight Eisenhower inaugurated president.

Ball and Arnaz, who owned the show, parlayed their fortune into TV production, buying the old RKO studios (where Ball had once been under contract) and turning it into Desilu. By the end of the decade, under the leadership of Arnaz, everything from "The Lineup" to "December Bride" to "The Untouchables" was being shot there.

Despite their success, the Ball-Arnaz marriage wasn't any better than it had been when Arnaz was touring, and in 1960 the couple divorced. She would return to television in two years with another long-running sitcom; Arnaz sold his share of Desilu to Ball and dabbled in television through the 1970s.

KOVACS, ERNIE

b. Trenton, NJ, 1919; d. 1962. Driven, pioneering television comic whose camera trickery and wild satire predated TV's penchant for crazy visual blackout comedy in the late 1960s. Endlessly admired today, Kovacs wasn't a huge audience favorite during his lifetime, jumping from show to show and timeslot to timeslot.

AS A REGULAR: "Deadline for Dinner," DUM, 1950; "Kovacs on the Corner," NBC, 1951-52; "It's Time for Ernie," NBC, 1951; "Ernie in Kovacsland," NBC, 1951; "Take a Guess," CBS, 1953; "Time Will Tell," DUM, 1954; "One Minute Please," DUM, 1954-55; "The Ernie Kovacs Show," NBC, 1955-56; "The Tonight Show (Tonight)," NBC, 1956-57; "Take a Good Look," ABC, 1959-61; "Silents Please," ABC, 1961; "The New Ernie Kovacs Show," ABC, 1961-62.

* Kovacs reaped critical and audience acclaim for his half-hour special that aired January 19, 1957 on NBC. The show was thrown together at the last minute when Jerry Lewis announced he'd use only a hour of a 90-minute slot. Kovacs used a set and camera tilted at a 15 degree angle and, without dialogue, played Eugene, a poor soul whose food would keep rolling away from him when he'd place it on a table.

* Kovacs died in an automobile accident on January 13, 1962.

ABOUT THE AUTHOR

David Inman grew up watching too much TV. As a child his mother would punish him by sending him outside to play. When he did go out, it was to play "Gilligan's Island" (he usually was the professor) or "Hogan's Heroes" (he'd usually play LeBeau) with the neighborhood kids. In 1981 he began writing a TV question-and-answer column, "The Incredible Inman," for The Louisville (Kentucky) Times; the column now appears in The (Louisville) Courier-Journal and is syndicated nationwide by Gannett News Service. Inman was born in Louisville and grew up across the Ohio River in Jeffersonville, Indiana. He and his wife, Rebecca Terry, have a son, Sam.

TELEVISION/REFERENCE

Did you know that:

☐ Richard Dreyfuss used supernatural powers . . . as a warlock on "Bewitched"?

☐ Jack Nicholson strolled down the streets of Mayberry, not once but twice?

☐ Both Clint Eastwood and Mae West "horsed around" with Mr. Ed?

These and thousands of other tantalizing TV tidbits are contained in The TV Encyclopedia—the most complete, authoritative guide to all the stars, directors, producers, and writers who have worked in television since its beginning. This is the only book to offer:

- more than 7,500 alphabetized listings of TV personalities
- series credits and credits for guest appearances on sitcoms, variety shows, and specials
- fascinating and fun-filled biographical sketches, lists, and TV factoids
- scores of trivia quizzes designed to test your TV IQ
- and much, much more

Presented with style, authority, and most important, a sense of humor, The TV Encyclopedia is the most ambitious television book available.
